

FRANK DANIELS AND THE CHORUS GIRL.

Frank Daniels had a funny experience in Chicago during the engagement last spring of his musical piece, "The Office Boy." On the second night of his engagement there was a heavy storm. Mr. Daniels had ordered a carriage to meet him at the stage door to convey him to his hotel, and he had invited his manager, Mr. Charles B. Dillingham, to accompany him. He and Mr. Dillingham supposed they were in for a nice ride to their hotel, a few minutes over something congenial in the cork line, and then bed. Now, "The Office Boy" company had and still has in its membership a whole lot of pretty girls. Daniels is a rather slow dresser, but as he emerged from his dressing-room in street attire, he noticed that one particularly pretty girl had not departed. He and Mr. Dillingham went outside the theater just as a handsome brougham with a coachman dashed up to the door. Daniels and Dillingham made a break for the vehicle and were about to enter, when a heavy masculine voice from the depths within growled:

"What's the matter with you fellows, anyhow?"

Daniels stepped aside just as the belated chorus girl slipped into the carriage. She was whirled away and Daniels stood in the storm speechless with astonishment. His cab did not show up, and as he trudged hotelward through the rain, he remarked to Mr. Dillingham:

"I'd rather be a chorus girl upon a night like this any time, than only a poor little star comedian."

HAVE YOU NOTICED THE BUILDING PERMITS?

A man who has the interests of the city at heart will read the bank clearings and the building permits with as much interest as any other item of news in the paper.

And now days, when he reads the building permits, he reads the name of Reavis in every list. Reavis is the name of a young man, a hustling young man, and not the romantic cognomen of some suburban villa, or a pair of sweet-sounding syllables that designate a successful health food.

Reavis is the name of the man who a short time ago founded The Reavis System, under which more homes have been and are being built in this city than in any similar period before. Reavis has given an impetus to those who thought they wanted to build a home, and his sign alone, "Whose Roof Is Over Your Head?" is an inspiration to the man paying rent. Reavis would be a funny man, if he were not in for the main chance, like all of the rest of us, but in the meantime, his work is a positive benefaction to every property-holder in the city.
